“ I worked for Chet at Borg-Warner Automotive Control Systems in the mid-1980s - he was my engineering manager. Chet was the kind of person that would give young engineers a chance at developing new products for the automotive market and was never afraid to hire young people. Over the years I have worked with the alumni of BWACS that worked with and for Chet and I know that Chet made a difference in their lives. He was a kind man, passionate about his job, fair, and had a very humorous streak. Many of Chet's past employees have gone on to senior engineering positions over the years and many are retired now. The world will miss Chet.
