“ Sandy and I were close friends during elementary and Jr. High, soul-mates for sure. We spent hours after walking home from school at the stop-sign where she had to go left and I had to go right. Teachers wouldn't let us sit together in class...disaster. We would take 25 cents each and meet up at the World Drug Store, buy vanilla cokes and a Mad magazine, sit at the booth for hours laughing at every line. Sandy was blessed with the greatest sense of humor, a sweetness everyone loved, and a relentless resilience. We lost track of each other in adulthood, but recently reunited a few years ago. It has been an absolute joy to be back with the girl that shared those innocent years with me, she's still the same. She has a special spot in my heart that no one else occupies. Sail free, sweet Sandy, until we meet again.

“ Sandra and I were friends at C.B. Berry elementary school. I remember her kindness and her sweetness. She lived behind the Big World Drug Store so we made many trips there. I saw her last year at our 50th high school reunion, so we shared some old memories. Rest in Peace
